

4th September, ABC Rural News

<http://www.abc.net.au/rural/news/content/200809/s2355309.htm>

Interviewer: Some of the country's first GM canola crops are struggling with the drought. Northern Victorian grain grower Evan Ryan from Yarrawonga says if the rain stays away he may even have to cut his valuable crop for hay. But despite this, he thinks it was the right decision to go GM.

Evan Ryan (Yarrawonga): Yes it was the right decision, for the right circumstance to put the GM canola in. So I'm happy with the decision, It's just a matter of the season and water allocations that are working against us at the moment. As, ah, with most things in agriculture the lack of season and how that deals its cards to us. )